TO SUMMER HOMES.

Sedalia, Mo.—Dear Miss Lamb: Judging from an enlightened moral and Christian viewpoint is it right for a young lady who is engaged to be married to go driving and attend places of amusement with others than her future husband? Does the fact that she is one of a house party away from her home, and that of her betrothed at the time excuse her? An answer will be of interest to your very truly.

A. B. H.
My dear lady, this is a matter that circumstances alone can govern. You can't set sown any rules for young women who are engaged. The ruling depends entirely on what they want or want not to do. And even then there are a thousand little ex-tenuations that no one can foresce or pro-

A young girl who engages herself to a man supposably prefers him to all others. When she makes an appearance at the thewhen she makes an appearance at the the-ater or the summer garden with another man, there is usually some excellent rea-son for it, provided the girl is not a giddy triffer. I once knew the gossips in a big town to set up a great hue and cry be-cause, forsooth, they beheld the belle of the village eating ice cream at a church lawn fete with a strange young man, who apparently was interesting her to a marked apparently was interesting her to a marked degree. The belle had just become engaged the minister of the church that had the lawn fete under its wing. You can fancy the agitation. It grew tre-mendously by 9 o'clock, especially as the belle did not offer to introduce the strangealso the good-looking-young man to any of the other village maldens. The belle was a mischlef, I may add. By 10 o'clock groups of well-meaning matrons were standing about watching the pair, commiserating the clerical gentleman who seemed strangely blind to the "goings-on" of his flances, and wondering what they ought to do about it.

One of them—the most well-meaning, of course—finally deemed it time for action, so she strolled up to the pair of reprobates, made some offhand remark to the girl and waited for an introduction, it came,
"Mrs. Jones, allow me to present my friend, Mr. Montmorency Jackson of Baltimore," said the belle, her eyes sparkling with ghoulish gles. The mafron bowed with great hauteur, to find herself looking into the face of a young person who pulled off a slight blonde mustache, gently uplifted an equally blonds curly wig from a girlish forehead, and said, entreatingly, "Don't give me away, ma, I'm having the time of my life, and all the girls think I'm a lovely man."

Oh, yes, "Mr. Montmorency, etc.," was the well-meaning matron's madcap daughter, and you may be very sure that the W. M. M. almost had a stroke of apoplexy

But to return to the Sedalia affair of the house party. I can see no reason why a young girl, off with a party of friends for the week-end should not enjoy all the atthe wees enu should be tentions which young men also of the party care to show her. The fiance, unhappily for himself, is not invited or unable to come. himself, is not invited or unable to come. That is his misfortune, to be borne with fortitude. The girl is by no means unfaithful if she goes to drive with a pleasant friend in the house. She is merely exer-cising her prerogative to enjoy youth and youthful pleasures while she is yet young. Don't, my dear lady, deprive her of her birthright. She will never be young and girlish and gay but once.

There is another side to the question. If the girl has unthinkingly engaged herself to a man, I care not how worthy of her he may be, or how fitted to take care of her the rest of her life, if she has discovered that he does not occupy her whole mind and soul, and that she is rather relieved than otherwise when out of his sight, then by all means let her find it out before the marriage bells have begun to ring. Noth-ing assists the finding-out process so much as separation, and a mingling with other ingaged persons can often see too much of each other. Friendships and deeper af-fections, too, require careful handling, a slow and cautious cultivation, and while en engaged pair may naturally desire each other's society often, it doesn't do a bit of this last week sent out cards for the martial desire this last week sent out cards for the martial desire the martial desired this last week sent out cards for the martial desired this last are other people in the world than each other. Besides, unless they do remember this fact, how in the world are they ever going to enjoy the pleasure of comparison? Somebody—a girl—once declared in my hearing that this was the chief joy of being engaged—it gave one such a chance to note how very superior the man was to all other

Miss Caroline Newman, I regret to say, is seriously ill at her home, and has been for a week or more. Miss Newman, her friends are convinced, has had decidedly more than her share of illness for the last year, though she declares, I believe, that there are compensations, so solicitous have the friends been in matters of calls, books and flowers. The Newman-Taylor wedding is not to take place before next November. There was some talk of late June, but Miss Newman's illness has decided in favor of the fall.
